PROJECT FAMILIES FOREVER

When Delphi started acting differently, Aliko thought maybe it was arthritis. But, it turns out, it was something completely different. "I found out that Delphi had pyometra, which I had never even heard of," Aliko says. "Things progressed quickly and ended up so bad I needed to see an emergency vet."

The cost of surgery was very high, though. Without it, Delphi wouldn't make it. Pyometra is a uterine infection that can be fatal without treatment. "I went home in a panic and started researching any possible options and calling everywhere ... I could reach to inquire about options," added Aliko. When a search turned up Spay Illinois, she called. It was a last-ditch effort that turned everything around for Delphi and her mom.

"The receptionist seemed genuinely concerned for Delphi's well-being," says Aliko. "She was extremely patient and understanding with me. I cannot express the level of comfort that brought me or the amount of relief I felt when I was able to get my baby scheduled for the next morning."

Aliko was terrified on the way in the next day, but when staff greeted her and treated her and her bestie "like family," that helped. Soon, Aliko would hear that her baby had made it through just fine.

Now, she lets people know how she feels about Spay Illinois. "I would tell [others] that these people truly love animals and that I could think of no better place to take your pet. I would tell them that they saved my dog's life."
